The general conference of International Labour Organisation [ILO] on June 25 1957 adopted a convention on Abolition of forced Labour. Bonded Labour or forced Labour or compulsory Labour is strong violation of human Rights as very clearly indicated and highlighted in the United Nations Charter Rights [UDHR]. The convention was enforced on January 17, 1959. The signatory countries to the convention undertakes and agrees not entertain bonded Labour.

Article 1 of the convention clearly indicates bonded or forced Labour shall not be used in any form:

- ⇒ As a means of political coercion
- ⇒ As a means of education
- ⇒ As a means of punishment for holding (expressing) / Political views.
- ⇒ As a means of Labour discipline
- ⇒ As a means of punishment for
- ⇒ As a means of Racial, social, national or religious discrimination. To support the countries in taking effective measures to completely abolish force / or Compulsory Labour the International Labour

Organisation [ILO] launched a project in the name "prevention and elimination of Bonded Labour" in South Asia.

But however efforts are being made very sincerely to eradicate bonded labour world wide yet slavery oppression and exploitation slavery oppression and exploitation of society most vulnerable members especially women and children continue to persist.

Bonded Labour in India :-

Article 23 of para I large down that "begar and other similar form of forced labour are protected"

* The word 'begar' means labour or service provided by a person without remuneration. Bonded Labour is included within the scope of forced labour. Bonded labour is a forced labour.

* Bonded Labour is punishable because it is a offence under Article 23 of para I of the Indian Constitution. To give effect to the provisions of Indian constitution parliament in the year 1976 passed an Act called Bonded Labour system [abolition] Act.

This encourages the abolishing of bonded labour

The Implementation of the Act is constantly
